Scammers threaten violence in new scheme

A new scam arriving in e-mail inboxes contains a death threat, and marks a new low in fraudster tactics, according to a security company.

The spammed message claims to come from a professional hit man who supposedly has orders to murder the recipient, but will drop the contract if he is paid $80,000. The "killer" says he has been shadowing the recipient for 10 days, and will produce taped evidence of the planned killing for a down payment of $20,000.

According to security vendor Sophos, the scammer will try to dupe the recipient out of personal information, such as bank account numbers and passwords.
